Introduction: The purpose of this study was to evaluate the attitudes, awareness, and barriers toward evidence-based practice. Methods: A survey consisting of 35 questions pertaining to the use of scientific evidence in orthodontics was sent to 4771 members of the American Association of Orthodontists in the United States. Each respondent's age, attainment of a master's degree, and whether he ...

in orthodontic patients, and led to the use of the term iatrogenic consequence [Brezniak and Wasserstein, 2002]. However, a growing body of evidence suggests that single nucleotide variations in human genome are also associated with development of ARR, suggesting that orthodontic treatment is not the only culprit [Al-Qawasmi et al., 2003].

While the updated Cochrane Review into retention 29 provides some information to inform an evidence-based approach to orthodontic retention, there are clearly still many unanswered questions. At the time of writing, there was limited high-quality evidence from research on which to base our clinical practice of retention.
