When faces aren't a part of the picture, an entirely new world opens up. With a hidden face, you're just a person with a great (and usually relatable) story to tell. Even if a few people do end up comparing themselves to your faceless features, most viewers will appreciate the details, compositions, and themes in your work.

The Mannerist master at the 16th-century imperial Habsburg courts of Vienna and Prague, Giuseppe Arcimboldo of Milan was probably the best known artist for creating extraordinary hidden faces. He arranged flowers, vegetables, fruits, shells, scallops and other animals, books and different things on the canvas in such a way that the whole collection of objects formed a portrait.
