Tripping Over the Truth: The Metabolic Theory of Cancer. It's a "scientific paradigm" story: right now, the prevailing wisdom is that cancer is caused by a series of genetic mutations that then send the cells off on a wild spree of proliferation, angiogenesis (making their own blood supply) and eventually metastasis.

A history of cancer research that advocates for understanding the disease through a metabolic rather than genetic lens. In this debut health book, Christofferson draws on noted scientific histories, published papers and his own interviews with individuals involved in cancer research to present an argument in favor of treating cancer through understanding the role of cellular metabolism.
